

Pimenta da Neyde

This extraordinary chile pepper never ripens to any other color from purple. The plant itself is extremely pretty too. The foliage, stems and flowers get easily darkened by the sun. The color of the pods varies from black to purple with completely different shades of purple. Under the direct light the pods can be black, but the pods hiding under the foliage can be practically pink. This variety originates from Brazil. Thanks to Mrs. Neyde Hidalgo, this variety is somewhat known amongst the most serious chileheads. Definitely worth growing!

Fidalgo Roxa

This chile pepper variety looks like it has candies hanging on a plant. Simply put, just stunning looks! In most cases ornamentals are not bred for the taste, but this variety definitely has the juicy, fruitful taste for super culinary uses that only a true chilehead can understand.

The colors vary from light green to purple and pink. The plant itself is also very pretty with a dark foliage under the full sun. Also, this one really likes growing in pots, even small pots will do nicely. A great plant to have around your house, garden, greenhouse, patio or balcony!

Purple Bhut Jolokia

Purple Bhut Jolokia is a variety which has all the great qualities of a famous 'Ghost Pepper' aka. Bhut Jolokia. But it also has very distinctive looks. The pods, foliage and flowers have purple colors which make this super hot useful plant look amazing! If you like extremely hot chile pepper varieties and also like pretty plants, then this might be worth checking out!

These pods will ripen from pale green, to different shades of purple, and finally to red. The taste is quite good, definitely makes one of the greatest super hot powders! A must have for the chilehead who loves exceptional varieties!

This variety is very, very unique! I would start by emphasizing the fact that this is one of the tastiest chile peppers out there! Besides being so tasty, it bears a lot of pods. This plant enjoys growing anywhere as long as there is plenty of light and enough temperature. The looks of this compact plant are great. The multi-colored pods which ripen from pale green, to pink with shades of peach and purple highlights!

Everyone who looks at this plant immediately. But delicious more also a It's not hottest enough cooking.

This variety is definitely versatile by all means. There's simply no excuse not to pass growing this amazing variety. It will surely be a favorite of many chileheads to come!

after tasting these pods, they will be even amazed. There's nice heat level. even close to the ones, but hot for hot & tasty

Cheiro Roxa

A favorite from few years back. Cheiro Roxa has always been an amazing producer of these great looking pods! The plant is very, very pretty. And when the foliage gets filled with these amazing looking pods with so many different looking, great colors, it's hard to take your eyes off from this stunningly beautiful plant! The pods are just above average hot and work very nicely with all kinds of delicious cooking. Try using fresh or powdered. It will work great in every way. Very ideal plant to have around and it's easy and fun to grow!
